Information about the Icam Jesuits Technical Institute Foundation

About the Foundation

The Icam Jesuits Technical Institute Foundation is a non-profit organisation which was established on 29 December 2004. Its founders are: the ICAM (Institut Catholique d'Arts et Métiers) French technical college called and the Jesuit Order.

Mission

The Icam Jesuits Technical Institute Foundation is a bridge between the world of science and industry. In cooperation with enterprises we educate engineers, ensuring the achievement of high competencies in the area of technology, production management and acquiring practical professional experience.

We accompany enterprises in their development by helping them to carry out technical and organisational projects.

In our operations we refer to Christian and universal values such as trust, freedom, responsibility and solidarity.

We draw from over one hundred years of experience in running ICAM schools for engineers. We are inspired by Jesuits' pedagogical methods being elaborated for several hundred years, which are aimed at integral personal development.

Goals and values

We want enterprises to be able to take advantage of the huge potential of young engineers who embark on their professional career. We discover talented graduates of technical studies, who will contribute to the development and growth of companies' competitiveness. To this end, we have elaborated an effective training programme for employees.

We train young engineers who want to achieve personal mastery in their professional life, who are creative, open to the world and other people's needs. We want them to be able not only to meet technical and organisational challenges, but also acquire leadership as well as communication and teamwork skills. That is why, personal development is an important element of training.
